

Haunted: a screenplay

The nightmare begins... Jennie and Michael move into their dream house in a quiet neighborhood. Its the perfect place to start a family until the inexplicable starts. Strange noises, furniture rearranging itself, objects appearing and disappearing. Then Jennies sister disappears and with the help of an ageing detective, Jennie realizes that there is something even more sinister at play, than a malevolent spirit... Prelude INT. OLD, BUT WELL RESTORED HOME, MAIN BEDROOM NIGHT A couple in their late thirties are hastily busy packing suitcases. The suitcases and bags are thrown open on the double bed. Theyre not looking at specific things but merely grabbing clothes from the cupboards and drawers and throwing them unto the bed and into the suitcases and bags. A small dog is barking incessantly at their feet. They dont pay it much attention. They look terrified. The dog suddenly stops barking, its ears picking up at an unheard sound. It turns its head towards the open bedroom door, leading to a small walkway and stairs. It runs out of the bedroom, starting to bark again. It heads down the stairs and out of sight. Its owners dont notice. We hear the BARKING recede as the dog runs further from the room. It suddenly stops barking. The man, not noticing the dogs disappearance, turns to his wife.

HUSBAND Im getting the car. Meet you out front. The wife nods, not even looking up. Shes busy with her jewelry and vanity case. The man leaves with a handful of suitcases and bags. He tromps down the stairs and out of sight. The wife is busy packing the last of her things, closing her bags and cases. She frantically looks around the room a final time, grabs her things and is about to set off when the lights go out.

WIFE Harold? There is no answer. She puts her luggage down and slowly makes her way out of the room and down the stairs. She listens intently for any sounds, but can only hear her own ragged breathing and pounding heart. She sees a single light shining. The kitchen light. She makes her way across the foyer, down a small passage towards the light. She gasps for breath when she sees her dog on the kitchen table. Neck broken, an apple in the mouth, posed as a pig at a banquet. She's about to turn and flee to the door when she slips on the surface. She regains her balance and doesn't fall. She looks down at a puddle of blood. Her mouth opens in a silent scream, her hands effectively shutting off any sound trying to escape from her. Filled with fear she looks around, sees her husband's luggage neatly stacked by the closed back door. She's about to walk that way when the kitchen light also goes out. She gasps, a small scream escaping her. She gives a small tentative step in the direction of the door when the basement door creaks open behind her. She stops, eyes wide with fear and turns towards the dark pit. She peers but cannot see anything. Then she does and screams... (Haunted also includes a cameo appearance by Carver, the main character in the novel A Stir of Ash and Embers.)
